Guide to Website Navigation Design Patterns

In WEB (S) design, there are certain COMMON (A) design patterns that are used for interaction. Site navigation has a WIDE (A) variety of common and familiar design patterns that can be used as a foundation for building EFFECTIVE (A) information architecture for a website.

This guide covers popular SITE (S) navigation design patterns. For each site navigation design pattern, we will discuss its common characteristics, its DRAWBACKS (S), and when best to use it.

Top horizontal bar navigation is one of the two most popular kinds of site navigation menu design patterns out there. It's used most FREQUENTLY (AD) as the PRIMARY (A) site navigation menu, and is most commonly located either DIRECTLY (AD) above or DIRECTLY (AD) below the site header of all web pages in a site.
